gan?-Horace Greely never went west as a farmer and was grasshoppered and burned out by prarie fires, and blown away. He went as a tourist and saw the advantages, the rolling praries as they appeared in passing through, but did not see or seem to see the disadvantages of the country, the destructive ffres, the howling winds which are never weary, or the absence of employment for those who are dependent more or less upon their labor for their subsistence. He did not advise young men of the north to go south. He knew that with their northern habits. politics and ideas, that it would be hazardous. He knew that it would be a constant fear of the revolver and bowie, to say nothing of the yellow fever and other epidemics so prevalent in the south. But if it is not advisable for young men who are short of means to go south or west, what can be said of Northern Michigan? If a young man is accustomed to work, is energetic and industrious, there is no better place he can go. Here we have "millions of acres which want hands." the following case may be cited; Wil-

While visiting home on a furlough he was assaulted on account of his Union principles by tow men named Fox, and in self-defense he wounded one of his assailants. He was reported, tried, and honorably aquitted by the court-martial. This was in 1863. A few days ago, Fox having learned that all the records of Beasley's court-martial had When the editors of the Okolona been lost and destroyed, brought an Court refused to assign him one, not a remarkable thing when it is considered that eleven members of that court which condemned him were secessionists, and three of that eleven ex-Confederate officers. An attorney who volunteered to defend him was assaulted by the Rebel element and prevented from entering court. E.inlee, another Union veteran, is also languisi .ing in the Virginia State Prison for an offense of which he was legally acquitted during the war. Beasley's case is attracting considerable attention and an effort will be made to secure his release. The Clarksburg Telegraph heads a subscription list for the benefit of his
